Lane, and was amazed, yet rejoiced, at the fervor with which her friend had received the tid ings. "At last?" she cried. "Oh, I am so thankful! To has laved you so truly -so long!"

And so, when from brother Reginald's letter Mrs. Lane read the story of Georgia Marshall's final difference with her employers, no time was lost in demanding that she should come to their army home for what Mabel termed a good long rest. She was determined that Georgia should have just as good a many devotees as any girl that ever turned the heads of the backelors of the Eleventh. For the week preceding the young lady's arrival she had been impulsively preparing the young fellows for Georgia's coming and sounding ber praises to many a listening ear. But these gentlemen heel seen her only at the station the afternoon of her arrival after a dusty ride; and Hearn himself, being officer of the guard, was not presented until the following day. That evening, however, he was her escort to the little gathering at the colonel's, and was far from content that she did not second the cordial invitation extended by Capt. and Mrs. Lane to come in and chat a while.

But one buggy, drawn by a gray horse, contained two men whose appearance. Miss. Marshall's seen eyes had noted as they passed, the first time and closely scrutinized as they came down the next. One was flashy in dress; both were loud in their talk and swaggering in manner; both were smoking eigars of questionable origin and one of them had the unmistakable cut of the German Jew.

The ladies were chatting blithely, but both Miss Marshall and Miss Wharton noted that the buggy with the gray horse was halted at the store rading, and at the door stood the two men, in civilian dress and a third in the undress uniform of the cavalry. All three-stared intently at the occupents of the baronche with that singular expression of mingled impudence and familiarity which is so marked a characteristic of the street loafers always hanging about the corners of certain thereuxlafares of our western cities where the police are not yet instructed in these rules of civilization which require such parties to be moving on. As the ladies were whirled by Mr. Schon berg was seen to wink expressively, and the soldier, a dark faced, beetle browed fellow, with his hands in his pockets, looked after them and grinned.
